The Challenge of Process Analysis: Identifying the Threads

In an ongoing survey conducted by Innovative Management Tools, it is revealed that a significant number of companies, 84.62% to be exact, encounter challenges related to process analysis. Let's look at three common scenarios that prompt organizations to scrutinize and optimize their processes.

Scenario 1: Tweaking for Today's Demands

A process isn't "broken", but it could use some tweaking and updating to today's work and demands.

Scenario 2: Inheriting the Past

A new department head inherited "old" processes. He/she sees the need to review those processes with the staff to see where they want to make changes or see the need for changes to be made.

Scenario 3: Evolving Business Models

The current business model and strategies have rendered certain processes outdated. A decision was made to take the time to do an update, upgrade, or overhaul to some core processes.

These challenges 1) negatively impact efficiency, 2) normalize old habits and behaviors that are no longer beneficial to the process, and 3) create and perpetuate processes that are out of sync with the current company strategy.
